

ANGIE MACRI

Witch Hollow Road

Apples
not grown in a cave valley are blessed:

trees in rows, cut low in management, like great roses from which we can eat,

no fallow dream,
but sweet

as if from a witch's hand (don't you know that story?), as if from our common mother's hand (you know that story, too).

She misses us with her kiss lost in air.
